In the Counselling &amp; Development program at George Mason University we have recently redesigned the mission statement and curriculum to focus on social justice, multiculturalism, leadership and advocacy. Social justice courses, internships, projects and activities are currently instituted into the curriculum at both the Masters and Doctoral level graduate training. These ideas will be presented and explored in this session. Kumar Nayak: The discussion shall aim at understanding the social, economic and demographic consequences of displacement of the socially weaker segments of population such as the tribes, on the wake of the development needs of a developing country like India. A specific reference shall be made on the continuing debate as to the very need of such a development that forces displacement and dislocation. Sungurova: This is a project to be started in fall of 2002. It contends that the three paradigms are based on abstractions of law. That there is need for the localization of refugee law as the fourth most important plane, which spells out the realpolitik of refugee protection. The local level is thus the 'space', 'link', 'gap' and 'missing' element to complete the process of refugee protection. Lal Fonseka: In Sri Lanka, thousands of people have displaced as result of forced migration and some have come to the south and have integrated into the there local communities, in between ten to fifteen years ago as a result of ongoing war. And now, it seems that they are not considered as displaced. Therefore, when does a person cease to be considered as displaced? Belton/Henderson: 'The roses stink from here!
